

The Blazeman Foundation for ALS

In October of 2005, Jon “Blazeman” Blais became the first person with ALS to finish an Ironman. He completed the 140.6 mile event (2.4 mile swim, 112 mile bike ride, 26.2 mile run) in 16.5 hours to honor all past and present People with ALS (PALS). As Blazeman rolled across the finish line in Kona, Hawaii, he challenged all endurance athletes to help find a cure for ALS.

The Blazeman Foundation for ALS was created in 2006 to help raise awareness and much needed funds for ALS medical research. The Blazeman Foundation for ALS is a 501 (c) (3) organization whose mission is to 1) raise awareness about ALS by leveraging the energy and compassion of the multi-sport community, and 2) raise funds to find a cure ALS ... “so others may live.” The foundation encourages, recruits, and supports endurance athletes all over the world to join Team Blazeman and battle together as Blazeman Warriors in the “War On ALS.”

The Blazeman Foundation for ALS both organizes and supports quality athletic events all over the world as a way of encouraging members of Team Blazeman and others to raise funds and awareness for ALS.

The Blazeman Foundation for ALS uses all funds to support established ALS research foundations to enhance their important efforts in finding a cure and effective treatments for ALS.
